Half of CIA Is Moved CPYRGHT To Langley

FAIRFAX — The new Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) building quarters is growing into a growing concern. About half of the Washington-based staff has moved in to the Langley facility.

Col. Stanley Grogan, assistant to the CIA director, said operations in one main building are underway, and finishing touches are being put on to the other principal structure.

Just how many persons constitute "half" of the employees is like most other facts about the super-secret CIA — classified. Previously published estimates range from 3,500 to 40,000.

It would be easy to put 3,500 people in the facility but a pretty good trick to get 40,000.
